The next morning,
Oct. 18th

I've carried this around a week or two, and near time your letter has come. How your words convey those underneath feelings which we never speak!
My Darling, I wish that my love might surround you and assist you at this time — or rather, that you could feel surely all the love with which I do encircle you.

I am enclosing a few flowers which May gave me.
They were brought from the Inner Shrine of Baba'ullah by the Guardian, to the Maxwells, on the day of the marriage. You know, perhaps, that the marriage consisted only of a visit to the Inner Shrine, made alone by the Guardian and Rihygih Khanum, and then he chanted two prayers. This was all.

Dearest one, as we rise to service, Baba 'u'llah assists us. Remember what the Master says about sacrifice: that the iron sacrifices its qualities to the fire, in order to attain the attributes of the fire. You are doing wonderful work now. (I saw Forsythe Ward two nights ago) I love you.
